President Turner's Greetings

As we enter our 11th year I extend a warm welcome to all new and returning students.

During the coming year I hope each of you will realize your goals, make new friends and learn more about the world we live in as well as yourself.

During the year we will have several President's Hours which will be called "FOCUS" where we will discuss current issues of interest to all people on campus as well as other topics which might be suggested.

I would like to call your attention to the January Term, or that period between the first and second semesters when we will be planning for new and different types of activities. I hope you will help us to plan a vital and interesting program for this time.

I hope I will get to know many of you personally so please stop by the office whenever you can so we can have a chat. If there is anything I can do to help you, please let me know.

Lack Of Medical Director Delays Health Center Opening

Program Will Help

A new program for students uncertain of their future vocational plans will be inaugurated at Greenfield Community College in January. President Louis O. Turner has announced today.

Funded by the federal government through the New England Regional Commission (NERCO), the Exploratory Year Program will consist of special academic courses and counseling for a select group of thirty students each semester. These students will be identified by the director of admissions and the project coordinator as being uncertain of their vocation goals.

The Exploratory Year project has two phases: the establishment of a planning process for course development, utilizing educational and community resources during the summer and first semester of the academic year 72-73, and the offering of the exploratory academic course during the second semester. Also during the second semester a planning process package will be disseminated to other community colleges interested in developing similar programs.

Secondary school educators and members of the business community are working cooperatively with the college in the planning and development of the project. William White of Wilson's and Edward Jones, principal of Greenfield High School are chairing advisory committees.

The six credit academic course in which Exploratory Year students will be enrolled has as its objectives to study the relation of work to life, assist students in gaining insight into their own abilities and interests, giving them opportunity to explore various types of vocational skills and occupational opportunities, and to provide them with "shadow" placements in various occupations. Peer group relationships with advanced students in career curricula at the college will also be arranged, the field trips will be utilized to give Exploratory Year students a firsthand look at the world of work.

Students will also be guided in how to choose a job.

Greenfield Community College through its division of community services offers all people of the region the services of its community adult vocational guidance and occupational resource center located in Room 01 of the Main Building.

The opening of the new student health service, scheduled for this week, will be delayed. Dean Robert B. Keir said today, because of difficulty in finding a medical director.

According to Keir, a group medical practice turned down his proposal that one of their group assume the medical directorship. However, Dr. Calvin Hartshorn, president of the Franklin County Medical Society, has told Keir that the problem of helping the college find a suitable medical director is a responsibility of the medical community.

Although a number of nurses have shown interest in becoming the nurse associate for the student health service, that position cannot be filled until a medical director has been appointed, Keir said.

Many Not Covered

A poll taken last January by The Forum revealed that 32 per cent of the students at Greenfield Community College were not covered by any other insurance than the minimal accident policy required by the college. This policy covered students only during college related activities. Since 49 per cent of the students do not live with their parents, this means that a significant number of students may not have adequate health insurance coverage. Fifteen per cent of the students polled by The Forum said that it would be a serious financial burden to become seriously ill.

Edward B. Hanify, assistant director of Franklin County Public Hospital, in an article written for the January issue of The Forum, advised students not to use the hospital's emergency room as an alternative to obtaining a private physician. Emergency room care is not comprehensive enough, he said, and the cost is too great to be an effective alternative to a private physician. Another poll taken by The Forum in May indicated that 36 per cent of the students at the college had no personal physician or dentist.

Because of the obvious need for student health services at Greenfield Community College, the College Health Services Advisory Committee formulated a proposal for a student health service which has been approved by President Lewis O. Turner.

Advisory Committee

Members of the advisory committee are: Dean Keir, chairman; faculty members Marga Coler, Jeffrey Doscher, Brian Gilmore, Eleanor Goodman and William Peters; students Michael O'Bryan, Georgine Paulin and John Potter, Mrs. Margaret Craig, a nurse and Dr. Robert Davies and Dr. Merritt Low, local physicians.

The committee felt that the open door admissions policy at the college presented inherent health problems. "There are students from low income families who have never had a physical examination, immunizations, or tests for tuberculosis," the committee reported. "Cases of active tuberculosis have been discovered in community colleges where the nurse administered skin tests."

The committee corroborated The Forum's finding that many students do not have a family physician and added "that many of those who do, do not have a satisfactory relationship with him."

The committee also stated that many community college students are self-supporting on minimal incomes — emancipated minors, students attending college on state or federal subsidy programs and veterans on the G.I. Bill. These students, the committee felt, cannot afford extensive medical or hospital insurance.

The committee also reported that many community college students live together in self-supporting groups and for economic and social reasons give their health needs a low priority.

In a statement to students about the new health program, Dean of Students Robert B. Keir said: "The Health Service is totally concerned for the individual needs of every student enrolled at the college. It utilizes all resources available on campus as well as community agencies, organizations, and institutions to assist in meeting these needs. The Service contributes to the educational process by helping students to recognize their problems, make choices, maintain their own health, and progress toward their personal and educational goals.

"Good health — social and mental adjustment as well as physical fitness — is essential to both learning and efficiency," he said.

Cost Covered By SAF

The cost of the new program will be covered by an increase in the student activities fee from $25 to $35. It is anticipated that the physician will be appointed Medical Director to give overall supervision to the health service. A nurse associate will be appointed program coordinator, perhaps one with training and experience as a nurse practitioner.

The new student health service will be located on the first floor of the South Building on Newell Court, adjacent to the college's main building.

Early Finals Allow For Mini-Semester

A new mini-semester — the January Term — will be added to the academic schedule this year at Greenfield Community College.

Traditionally, final examinations at the college have been held during January. This year, however, finals will end on December 22 and the spring semester will begin on February 5. The new January Term will run from January 8 to 26, according to President Lewis O. Turner.

The purpose of the January term is to provide enriching activities not available to students and professional staff during the regular academic year, opportunity for individual study and research, community service experiences, specialized short courses, workshops for students and the community-at-large, workshops for professional staff, and research projects of value to the college, such as follow up studies of graduates.

"The college as a community of scholars may be a bit traditional and narrow," Turner commented, "but the college is composed of people who are interested in learning, and so our theme for the January Term might be 'Exploring and Learning Together' — all the members of the college community participating in various types of activities — courses, workshops, some for credit, some for fun. Our own insight and creativity are the only limits."

Early Childhood Education Added To Curriculum

A new associate in science degree program in early childhood education starts this semester at Greenfield Community College. President Lewis O. Turner announced today.

The two year program will prepare graduates for positions in nursery schools and day care centers. The curriculum will include: English composition, principles of psychology, natural science, oral communication, sociology, children's literature, child psychology, psychology of the exceptional child, introduction to early childhood education, art, music, drama, mathematics, social studies, reading and language arts for the young child and four semesters of supervised field experience.

Through its citizen support group, The Greenfield Community College Foundation, Inc., the college will be able to use the Greenfield Child Care Center as a field work setting. The Foundation owns and operates the Greenfield Child Care Center as a community service.

Because of the increasing number of women in the work force, the number of child care centers is also increasing; job opportunities for graduates of the early childhood education program at Greenfield Community College appear to be excellent, according to President Turner.

Mrs. Ethel M. Case, director of community services at the college, has responsibility for the professional direction of the day care center. She says, "The former feeling that day care centers are needed primarily for the destitute mother, the welfare recipient and disadvantaged children in general is being changed as our society recognizes increasingly the importance of early childhood training and education and the need for all adults—male and female—to have a variety of options about their life patterns.

"Educated women are asking that they be free to decide if they wish to stay at home during their children's early years or if they wish to contribute their skills to society and share the economic burdens of family development.

"Educators are increasingly recognizing that the early childhood years are extremely important in developing abilities and aptitudes important for later educational success. An increasing number of studies indicate that optional learning ages may be different than we had believed and that postponement of learning tasks might be wasteful of individual potential."

By instituting its associate degree program in early childhood education, Greenfield Community College hopes to prepare well trained persons to staff child care centers.

Four Added To Faculty

Greenfield Community College has added four new members to its faculty this fall, President Lewis O. Turner said today.

T. Budge Hyde will become coordinator of the art curriculum.

A graduate of the University of Utah, Hyde received the degree of master of fine arts from the University of Cincinnati, where he was also a member of the faculty. A veteran of the U.S. Army, he was an account executive for Newspaper Agency Corporation in Salt Lake City, and a member of the administrative staff for World Academy School for Foreign Study. His most recent position was as a graphic arts sales representative for the F. Roten Galleries.

Gerald J. Richard becomes the first full time faculty member for the law enforcement curriculum at Greenfield Community College.

Richard has served as a police officer in Nantucket, Amherst, and Leominster. Last year he was a part-time instructor in law enforcement at Greenfield Community College. He received his bachelor's degree from the University of Massachusetts in English and expects to receive a master of arts in teaching this year from that institution.

Elizabeth W. Van Guilder, who has been a part-time instructor at the college, will also join the faculty full time this year. She holds a master's degree from the University of Massachusetts and has taught at Sanderson Academy in Ashfield and the Mohawk Trail Regional High School.

At one time she was a reporter for the Nassau Daily Review Star and has published several articles in The Lutheran, national magazine of the Lutheran Church.

Donn M. Brechenser will join the Mental Health Technology faculty. He holds a master of science in social work degree from Virginia Commonwealth University.

His professional experience includes social work at the Prince William Department of Public Welfare, Manassas, Virginia; a consultant to the Virginia Department of Welfare and Institutions; child welfare supervisor to the Department of Public Welfare, Prince William County, Manassas, Virginia; casework supervisor to the Department of Human Resources, Arlington, Virginia; and most recently director of social service at the Franklin County Public Hospital.

Committee Volunteers Sought

If you would like to take an active role in helping to make policies for the College, consider working on one of the several student-faculty committees. These committees devise and recommend policies to Dr. Turner. Such committees as Academic Standards, Curriculum, Learning Resources, Guest Lecture and Performing Arts have openings for students, along with the faculty, to devise new programs and policies.

If you are interested in the functions of these committees, look at the Student Handbook for committee descriptions or stop in at the Student Activities Office or Dean of Students Office to sign an application to be considered by Student Government.
